Term: Dicisign

Quote: In regard to its relation to its signified interpretant, a sign is either a Rheme, a Dicient, or an Argument. This corresponds to the old division Term, Proposition, & Argument, modified so as to be applicable to signs generally. [—] A proposition as I use that term, is a dicient symbol. A dicient is not an assertion, but is a sign capable of being asserted. But an assertion is a dicient. [—] I define a dicient as a sign represented in its signified interpretant as if it were in a Real Relation to its Object. (Or as being so, if it is asserted.)
